Why the range is so wide

Pressure washing prices depend heavily on equipment. The $130 quotes are often from crews with consumer-grade machines. The $670 quote was from a company with commercial surface cleaners and post-treatment chemicals. You get what the equipment can deliver.

5 Things To Check First

1. Ask if they use a surface cleaner.

A surface cleaner is a round disc that spins two jets under a hood. It cleans evenly with no streaks. If someone points a single wand at your driveway, you will end up with tiger stripes. Ask before they start.

2. Ask about post-treatment.

Cleaning removes what is on the surface today. Post-treatment slows down future growth. Without it, algae and mold come back faster. Ask if it is included.

3. Check their Google reviews.

Look at photos if they have them. A good pressure wash job is night-and-day obvious in pictures. If they do not have before-and-afters, ask why.

4. Know what is NOT included.

Oil stains, rust, tire marks, and paint need special chemicals and extra time. No company includes these in a base price. If you have these, ask for a separate quote.

5. Get a written quote.

Driveways vary a lot in size and condition. A blanket price without seeing your property is a guess. Get a real number in writing first.

Quick tip

In Wilmington's humidity, driveways should be pressure washed every 12-18 months. Waiting longer means thicker buildup and a harder (more expensive) job.
